Europe are not doing well economically

Jobless Youth: Europe's Hollow Efforts to Save a Lost Generation

By SPIEGEL Staff

DPA

Europe is failing in the fight against youth unemployment. While the German government's efforts remain largely symbolic, Southern European leaders pander to older voters by defending the status quo.

"None of my friends believes that we have a future or will be able to live a normal life," says Kampani. "That wasn't quite the case four years ago."

SPIEGEL – May 20, 2013

Stylia Kampani did everything right, and she still doesn't know what the future holds for her. The 23-year-old studied international relations in her native Greece and spent a year at the University of Bremen in northern Germany. She completed an internship at the foreign ministry in Athens and worked for the Greek Embassy in Berlin. Now she is doing an unpaid internship with the prestigious Athens daily newspaper Kathimerini. And what happens after that? "Good question," says Kampani. "I don't know."

Faltering Economy in China Dims Job Prospects for Graduates

Gilles Sabrie for The New York Times

A job fair last month at Minzu University of China in Beijing. Companies have limited positions to offer graduating seniors.

New York Times – 2013/06/17

Businesses say they are swamped with job applications but have few positions to offer as economic growth has begun to falter. Twitter-like microblogging sites in China are full of laments from graduates with dim prospects.
